

staying strong:

a message from the Frederick County Chamber of Commerce

Time for Conversations

I've been writing these short observations to keep us all connected, and to remind you, maybe a little selfishly, that the Frederick County Chamber of Commerce is still here, still listening, and still trying to help our whole community stay focused on resources, programs and information in this confusing and troubling time.

Since we've had to eliminate all of our face-to-face events, like you, we've had to pivot our focus to online content delivery. This past week, we unveiled our Chamber Conversations: Trusted Advice in Challenging Times. Our first two episodes feature Shabri Moore of Moore Wealth and Amanda Haddaway of HR Answerbox. These are informal but deeply meaningful conversations with subject matter experts on a wide range of topics, but right now the focus is working in the COVID-19 pandemic.

In times of trouble and confusion, conversations are more valuable than ever. Conversations with people who have a lifetime of professional experience that they're willing to share can be a comforting, calming influence.

We're reaching out to other experts, as we hope to launch new episodes weekly. We hope all of you will take away new ideas, fresh perspectives and renewed energy as together we deal with the challenges ahead.

Join us at: [frederickchamberinsights.com/
category/work-smarter/chamber-conversations](https://frederickchamberinsights.com/category/work-smarter/chamber-conversations).

Rick Weldon
*President & CEO Frederick County
Chamber of Commerce*